Introduction

The U.S. Embassy in Yaounde is seeking proposals from grassroots non-governmental organizations for projects related to democracy and human rights. Proposals are due by April 15, 2012 and the program implementation period is approximately 12 months. Typical DHRF grants are approximately USD 10,000 (or about 4.5 million FCFA). Organizations that have successfully partnered with development agencies in the past and that can provide audited financial statements will be more competitive for this program and stand a greater chance of receiving funding. The U.S. Embassy will give priority to proposals that are creative and innovative and that utilize technology and modern media to reach a wide audience. In comparison, programs that are not activity-based, such as workshops, will be less competitive.

Civil society is essential to sustainable democracy and good governance. If capable and accountable government agencies are the supply side of democracy and good governance, civil society is the demand side. It forms a vital link between the clients and the providers of government services, and plays a necessary role in promoting and defending civil and political rights, without which democracy cannot take hold or endure.

The DHRF allocates grants to small, highly focused, short-term, high-impact activities proposed by dedicated indigenous organizations to promote and defend civil and political rights. Beyond the direct impact made by the activities it funds, DHRF builds civil society capacity by supporting organizations that are struggling to establish themselves and would otherwise lack the resources to acquire greater influence in society.

Civil and political rights are defined and elaborated in the United Nations' International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. These internationally recognized rights are also often enshrined or expanded upon in national statutes. Activities that promote the rule of law, political pluralism, domestic civil and legal rights, or the right to free religious belief and practice fall under this definition.

The DHRF does not fund on-going, multi-year activities or long-term institutional capacity building. It does not support development-oriented projects, humanitarian assistance, or the promotion of rights described in the United Nations' International Covenant on Social, Economic, and Cultural Rights (even though many African states include these in their definition of human rights). Some activities that support economic, social, and cultural rights may be funded by the Ambassador's Special Self-Help Fund (SSH).

Basic Proposal Outline

The U.S. Embassy will consider funding proposals that outline ways that your organization intends to:

- include activities, expenditures, and timelines that are consistent, reasonable, and within the ability of the organization to implement;
- monitor and evaluate proposed activities; and
- conclude activities within 12 months, without requiring further funding.

Basic Project Reporting

Grantees will be required to:

- submit receipts on a timely, preferably monthly, basis to the U.S. Embassy;
- ensure that expenditures are supported by adequate documentation and that funds are expended for their intended purposes;
- submit all receipts, return any unexpended advance of funds, and report on the activity's results at the conclusion of the program; and
- maintain basic financial records for the duration of the funded activity, and for a period of three years after submission of the final invoice and the project's conclusion.

Selection and Award Process

If a project is selected for consideration, someone from the U.S. Embassy will contact the applicant and verify the information. The selection committee will base its decision on the potential impact, feasibility, creativity, and financial soundness of the proposed activity. The committee will consider the track record of the organization proposing the activity as well as its contribution to the project.

How to Apply for the Fund

- Complete the application form and attach additional page if necessary. The application form is available online. It can also be requested by mail or in person at the U.S. Embassy. You can complete the application form and submit your proposal in English or French.
